With so many teas to choose from, we know that selecting a tea, especially trying a new one, may seem challenging. That's why we've decided to highlight some unique Stash Tea blends on these pages to make your choice a little easier.

WHAT IS MATCHA?

Matcha is the fine powdered, jade color green tea used for centuries in the Japanese tea ceremony. We refer to Matcha as the "greenest of green teas" because the entire powdered leaf with 100% of the tea's healthy antioxidants is consumed.

Matcha is sweet and smooth with just a hint of astringency. It acquires its delicate taste through a labor-intensive growing process.

Stash Tea has access to some of the world's best Japanese green teas, including Matcha, through Yamamotoyama, one of the oldest and most revered green tea purveyors in the world.

HOW IS MATCHA PRODUCED?

Four weeks before harvest, the tea gardens of the famous Nishio region of Japan are covered with tarps or bamboo mats to eliminate up to 90 percent of the natural light. The tea plants compensate for this loss of light by increasing chlorophyll content in their leaves.

Only the finest hand-picked tea leaves are then steamed, dried, and cut to remove veins and stems.

The tea leaves are then slowly ground into a fine powder using granite wheels, yielding only one ounce of Matcha per wheel per hour. Due to the many steps involved, Matcha is among the most expensive of all green teas.
